Who wants to do what?
It was New Year. It was time to plan some new things. Everyone in my family chose a new activity they would like to do.
My Mum wanted to learn to dive. She felt nervous but she overcame her nervousness. She went to diving lessons and dived with colourful fish and an octopus! She looked at them in amazement!

“Wow!” she said.
My Dad said he was tired. To cure his tiredness he wanted to improve his fishing in the peaceful countryside. He enjoyed fishing and sleeping in a tent. He said, “Peace and quiet is my enjoyment!”
My oldest sister wanted to improve her fitness. She went to climbing lessons and learned how to climb. “Climbing a high mountain would be a great achievement!” she said.
My Granddad wanted to sail on a ship. He would like to be a pirate! He said it would be great excitement. My Grandma said, “That is foolishness!”
My youngest sister wanted to visit London. She likes the busyness of the city. She visited Buckingham Palace on a double-decker bus. She watched the guards marching. “This is great entertainment!” she said.
My Grandma wanted to make some improvements in her garden. She made some plans and was very pleased with the neatness. She worked hard and made a colourful arrangement with the flowers.
My little brother wanted to learn how to make the best sandcastles. He planned to build large sandcastles and worked hard on the measurements. “I made the tallest and strongest sandcastle!” he said.
I wanted to be fearless and explore outer space! I would go in in a shiny powerful space ship. Maybe I would find life on another planet. I think I would need my parents' agreement as it might take me a long time!
Until I get my space ship, my Mum says I should do something else fearless...........
I should tidy my bedroom! “It’s like a jungle in there!” she said.
The End

What would you like to do? Where would you go?

Ask your family what they would like to do for enjoyment. Put their answers into a book like this one.
